Four friends. Three days. A way home that is disappearing.

Mara Ellery likes plans, lists and maps that tell the truth. So when the map she finds in the Gull Head lighthouse starts growing islands, and the road out of Wrenmouth turns grey and vanishes into fog, she knows something is badly wrong.

Beyond the lighthouse door lies the Fold: lamplit harbours, a forest that steals your voice, an orchard that hangs upside down, and a market that never stays in the same place twice. And somewhere at its edge, the Surveyor has begun the Stilling.

In seventy-two hours, every island on his great Chart will freeze for ever, and that includes Mara's town, her dad and her nan.
